We must definitely aim at some new Evangelical movement in Methodism which will gather up all that is best in the spirit of our past and apply it, as God shall guide us, through present-day methods to the problems of our age. 2. In this movement our first aim should be to start, in as many places as possible, small groups to supply a frank and living fellowship in a double aim, each of which is essential to the other - a Quest and a Crusade. (a) We must seek, both as our motive power and as an end in itself, that large and transforming experience of the resources of God in Jesus Christ, which we find in the pages of the New Testament, and which we are convinced God means this age to enjoy. In these groups these resources must be explored and made our own. It is only by this new equipment that the Church can be made equal to the tremendous times in which we live. (b) At the same time these groups must commit themselves to definite aggressive methods to reach the outside. The methods which suit each particular neighbourhood will be different: they must be discovered and fearlessly applied; but all methods must be dominated by the idea of bringing men and women to personal decision for Jesus Christ. 3. In our efforts we resolve to help one another to the utmost of our power. The old individualism which left each man to tackle the problem of his Church in comparative loneliness must yield to something better: we need a corporate movement in which each...
