Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: . . . 22 to the best of my knowledge and belief, phenacetin is the only product having any technical or commercial utility which had been produced by the acetylizing of any member of the species or class of amido-ethyl-ester-phenols. My familiarity with the literature of the subject enables me to state with confidence that all other experiments in the direction of acetylizing bodies of this species had resulted in mere useless chemical curiosities, and products. And not only so, but, in my opinion, such experiments had in some instances resulted in products which were so far from being useful, as to be detrimental and dangerous. 23 Dr. Hinrichs endeavors to support his position by a misinterpretation of the Centmblatt article. That article does not say that the existence of acetanilid or any other acid body indicated plainly the making of phenacetin, as Dr. Hinrichs contends that it...
