It was too much! His hand went to his mouth, and he uttered a whoop which brought every Comanche within hearing pell-mell toward the grove. Such a rush would have been their best chance for crushing Bowie s men in any case, but the charging warriors found no Texans to crush. Wild were the whoops of wrath and disappointment, but Great Bear himself was equal to the occasion. His face expressed strong admiration of such a feat of generalship, and he said, loudly, -- Ugh! Big Knife great chief! Getaway heap! Comanche tired now. Find Texan by and by. There was no help for it. The only thing to do was to rest and to eat, for immediate pursuit was out of the question. Miles and miles away, an hour or so later, in another camping place as good as the one they had left, the white riflemen also were taking it easy. They had plenty of buffalo cutlets to broil; they had distanced their pursuers, and they were contented. Boys, remarked Colonel Bowie, we ve gained a whole day s ride on em if we work it right. All right, colonel, responded Joe; but when that young Lipan rid in last night I begun to wish I was back in the Alamo. My skelp felt loose. He s a buster, remarked Jim Cheyne; but I m right down glad his dad is here. Best guide we could git. As...
